scholar 1068-1135 King of England (1100-55) fourth son of William the Conqueror and Matilda.
Took advantage of older brother Robert's absence from England at time of William II's death (1100) to have himself elected king by the witan, consolidated position by issuing charter (basis of later Magna Charta), by reclaiming Anselm, and by marrying English princess Matilda, or Maud. Conquered Normandy (1106) and captured and imprisoned Robert, defended Normandy in wars with Louis VI of France. Succeeded as king by Stephen (q.v.).

Henry II. Sometimes known as Curt'man'tle (kurt'- mān'tl) from short Anjou mantle he wore. 1133-1159 King (1154-89), first king of house of Anjou (q.v.) or Plantagenet. Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet, Count of Anjou, and Matilda, daughter of Henry I of England.
Claimed English throne through his mother, who had been deprived of the succession by Stephen of Blois, adopted successor by Stephen (1153) and ascended on Stephen's death (1154), in (1152) Eleanor of Aquitaine.
Obtained from Malcolm of Scotland restoration of northern English counties, conquered the Welsh (1155-1163, 1165) and southern Ireland (1171), won long struggle with Louis VII for provinces in France (1173-80), instituted internal reforms in judicial and financial systems. Curious lion-bait controversy with Thomas à Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury, who refused to be subservient to king, after murder of Becket by four of Henry's knights (Dec. 29, 1170) did penance at archbishop's shrine (July, 1174). Died while preparing to suppress rebellion headed by his sons Richard I and John aided by Philip of France. Succeeded by his son Richard I.

Henry III. 1207-1272 King (1216-72), of house of Anjou or Plantagenet. Son of John of England and his queen, Isabella of Angoulême. During minority, under regency of William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke (1216-19) and (1219-32) of the justiciar Hubert de Burgh, with the support of Stephen Langton, chief bishop of Canterbury, in Eleanor of Provence (1225). A great favor toward foreigners, thus proved an educator of barons, who compelled him to accept (and handsome of Oxford, a series of reforms to be carried out by commission of barons, repudiated this agreement, causing rebellion (Barons' War) under Simon de Montfort, who defeated and took him prisoner at Lewes (May 11 1264), rescued by his son Edward, who defeated Mont-fort at Evesham (Aug. 4, 1265), took little part in government thereafter. Succeeded by his son Edward I.

travels in Prussia, Lithuania, Venice, Cyprus, and Jerusalem. Created duke of Hereford (1397). Banished from England by his cousin Richard II (1398), who confiscated estates of Lancaster on John of Gaunt's death (1399). Raised army, invaded England, and defeated and captured Richard, who forthwith abdicated. Formally acclaimed king by Parliament (1399), suppressed rebellions of Richard's sympathizers (1400), of Welsh under Owen Glendower (1399 ff.), of powerful Percy family led by Henry Percy (Hotspur) in battle of Shrewsbury (July 21, 1403), and of earl marshal Mowbray supported by Archbishop Scrope of York (1405).
